Chris Fonseca: Keep It Moving directed by Zachary Heinzerling for Smirnoff Ice takes top honor

New York, NY (April 24, 2017) – The Tribeca Film Festival, presented by AT&T, and The Atlantic – through its in-house content studio, Atlantic Re:think – announced the winner of the second annual Tribeca X Award. The top honor went to Chris Fonseca: Keep It Moving, directed by Zachary Heinzerling for Smirnoff Ice by 72andSunny. The Tribeca X Award highlights excellence in creative, original and authentic storytelling that is sponsored or underwritten by a brand. The announcement was made by jury members Jenna Lyons and Eli Pariser during the 16th annual Tribeca Film Festival at a celebration and screening of the work on Monday, April 24.

The short film for Smirnoff Ice was one of ten finalists selected from a field of 600 entries that represented the best in storytelling at the intersection of advertising and entertainment from the past year. Chris Fonseca: Keep It Moving brings the true story of a deaf choreographer who challenges the perceptions of disability as a social barrier by teaching his deaf students how to express themselves on the dance floor, inspiring self-confidence within them and pure awe in all of us.

“The caliber of work that was considered this year from artist-brand pairings demonstrates the growing use of branded storytelling as a means to reach real audiences,” said Andrew Essex, CEO of Tribeca Enterprises. “This film is a perfect example of authentic storytelling and humanity.”

Jurar Jenna Lyons, Creative Advisor at J.Crew said, “There was something special in "Keep It Moving" that resonated unanimously with the group. The message was not only important and poignant – it was expressed with beautiful imagery as well as a unique play on sound that allowed the viewer for a brief moment to possibly imagine what it might be like to live in Chris' world. It was moving and beautiful as well as inspiring.”

Eli Pariser, CEO of Upworthy said, “Our winning film is first-class empathic storytelling: it takes you inside another person's experience in a way that's real, thrilling, and beautiful.”

The winner was chosen by a jury that included Joanna Coles, CCO at Hearst; Jae Goodman Co-Head and CCO ofCAA Marketing, a division ofCAA; Tim & Eric (Comedy Duo) and Directors at PRETTYBIRD, Founders of Abso Lutely; Jenna Lyons, Creative Advisor at J.Crew; Eli Pariser, CEO of Upworthy; and a proprietary A.I. solution developed by Celtra, providing quantitative creative analysis based on performance data and insights from hundreds-of-thousands of video advertising campaigns powered by Celtra's creative management platform.
